Linha

Marcio Kogan / Studio Mk27 Design

DESCRIPTION

An expression of the minimalism that pervades the Brazilian architect's designs, the Linha dining table is a manifesto of his constant pursuit of elegance in the proportions of his creations, and of his almost obsessive attention to detail.

Linha, or "line" in Portuguese, is his response to the challenge of designing a dining table with a large span, a frame only 16 mm thick, and a top that can reach up to 4 meters in length. Visually, it appears extremely lightweight and aerial, despite the strong impact of the materials used, in which marble boldly takes center stage.

In the more sculptural version, the frame designs a bridge, the top flush with the sides, whereas in the other tables the blade-like legs are set back from the surface. In the round top version, the cross-section of the blade-like legs is not rectangular but slightly curved on the inside.
